Past Events

Disabled Military Jet Causes Emergency Closure of LGB

Last Friday at 11:15 am, the Long Beach Airport was closed due to an Air Force training jet landing and becoming disabled on the main runway 12/30. Its position also blocked secondary runway 25R/7L causing it to be shut down for five hours. Consequently, no commercial air traffic was able to arrive or depart until the incident was cleared. The residual delays caused multiple operations to take place after the noise ordinance curfew. JetBlue had a total of five arrivals between 10:33 pm and 12:26 am and five departures between 10:15 pm and 1:20 am.

JetBlue Late Night Noise Ordinance Violations

In our August 5th newsletter, we published the JetBlue noise violations totals for the month of July which included 21 operations between 10-11 pm and 11 operations after 11 pm. I was later asked if the July total of 32 violations was a "typical" month. We crunched the numbers for 2016 (see chart below), and it turns out July's total was within a half percent of the monthly average of 32.4 noise violations. Residents who live outside the noise impacted neighborhoods may be surprised to learn that we average more than one noise violation per night or that JetBlue has been fined more than $460,000 over the past eight months.

And Finally

Unusual Sight (And Sound) Over Los Altos

Los Altos residents had a unique experience last Saturday afternoon as an Osprey (MV-22) landed at LGB. This was the first time I had seen an Osprey over Long Beach, so I contacted Noise and Environmental Affairs Officer, Ron Reeves, to find out if it was related to the disabled military jet incident that took place 24 hours earlier. Ron told me the incidents were unrelated and involved two different branches of the military: the disabled jet was an Air Force trainer, and the Osprey belongs to the Marine Corps. If the sight of the Osprey didn't get your attention, the sound sure did. It registered 101 dB at the Stearnlee Ave. noise monitor between Los Coyotes Diag. and the 405 Fwy.
