Pup's caretakers, they advised that he is, "eating well and doing great". As Marine Patrol officers, it is not uncommon to find a bit "skinny" and is currently under the care of the facility's specialists. The suspect was later identified to be a stray Sea Lion pup who had ventured in to visit us from the local coastal area. The pup was monitored and taken care of for a period of time at a facility before being transferred to San Pedro's Marine Mammal Care Center. The pup was then taken care of by their care team and treated for any necessary medical concerns.
